

Long Tall Sally

by Lori-Ann Murphy

Four summer months driving my truck and towing my camper to our RWFFA events throughout the west lead me to people that were full of wonder. Sure, no doubt confusing times for damn near everyone, but what we shared was how I felt wearing my big puffy down jacket on the morning the first frost hit - comfortable and protected. We focused on our fly fishing skills and adapted to what our outside world revealed. We listened to each other. We layered up and found out what was growing from inside us.

Pretty much everyone would tell me at the beginning of our trips that they are shy and it might take a bit to feel committed or have enough energy to get through the trip. I probably should write the list of disclaimers. Only because that is what they are - silly nonsense that keeps us from blossoming. There was a ton of excitement and also uncertainty which found balance. And those of you who were with me this season know that when we all completed the trip - what we felt was a rejuvenated sense of self.

Huge life obstacles had some serious perception changes. A cast, a pull on the line and some cheer from new and old fishing buddies right there with you. What you found and what was reinforced for me is just how good it feels when we make the commitment to put it out there and open ourselves to what we receive.

Fire, river closures and river management were the dominating parking lot topics among fishing guides. I truly felt like we were sharing stories much like the the old timers coming in on horseback reporting the news from counties near and far. As outfitters we all said the same thing, "this is the craziest year ever!" And that was because of all the people out on the river were craving room to breathe and explore our outside world.

I'm looking at notes from so many of you. Thank you!!! You are Reel Women through and through. Our grass roots will always remain a place for growth and exploration.

My gift to you is to get you aligned for more fun fly fishing! As a liaison to your fly fishing I am so excited about what we can do together. If you have been on a RWFFA trip this summer you will receive $100 off from any 2022 trip or school. 2022 is 50% booked with most outfitters so we really need to change our booking style. If I learned anything about this summer it is to plan way way ahead! And then, we get to know that we will all be out there next season - casting to our dreams.
